Introduction

Spectrum management is a critical priority for the global telecommunications ecosystem and is particularly significant for India, given the rapid expansion of 5G and the growing demand for wireless connectivity. With the international community advancing work towards the 6G framework, the coming years present significant opportunities for innovation, investment, and the evolution of wireless communications.

The timing of ISMC-26 is particularly important as administrations and stakeholders intensify their preparations for WRC-27. The conference will serve as an important platform for policymakers, regulators, industry leaders, researchers, and other stakeholders to exchange perspectives on key agenda items, align regional and national positions, and discuss emerging spectrum-management challenges. ISMC-26 will be particularly significant as an important platform for the final push towards WRC-27, bringing together key stakeholders to strengthen coordination, share views, build consensus, and help shape the outcomes of the upcoming World Radiocommunication Conference.
